

High School English Tutor
Lisa Crawford

Although I retired from teaching English at Ladue Horton Watkins High School in 2019, improving student writing and helping people find their voice are what motivate me to teach. During my 28-year career, I enjoyed working with both struggling learners and high achievers. I spent the bulk of my time teaching AP Literature, AP Language, and Advanced Composition to juniors and seniors; however, I also taught Sports Literature, sophomore Fiction, and a team-taught class called Composition and Reading Analysis (for struggling sophomores).

No matter who I teach, I believe it is my responsibility to make the learning process both enjoyable and challenging. By combining humor with high expectations, I push my students to do the best they can. I am here to guide and support; the students are the ones who have to do the work. Ideally, my tutoring provides them the confidence to become better readers, writers, and editors.

I am excited to help students discover skills that they are unaware they have.
